Meantime Brewing Joins BFBI

The Meantime Brewing Company have become the first brewery to join the BFBI (Brewing, Food and Beverage Industry Suppliers Association) now that it has broadened its Associate Member category to include brewers.

Meantime Masterbrewer Alastair Hook, said. 'As a trade association the BFBI represents best practice within the industry. In the past it has done much pro bono work for brewers and we have been saved onerous cost burdens as a result. Its internationalist outlook is invaluable to an increasingly export driven firm like ours. We are very keen to support the BFBI and are proud to add being the first brewing members to our growing list of firsts.'

BFBI Chief Executive, Ruth Evans, said. 'We are delighted that Meantime Brewery are the first brewery to join BFBI as an Associate Member. We believe we have a number of benefits of value to brewers, which complement and do not conflict with other Associations serving the brewing sector. Our weekly e-news service and lobbying on a number of technical issues, which have recently included isinglass, brewers grains, standardisation of dispense equipment are of benefit to traders and brewers alike. Our networking functions are unsurpassed in the industry, with Guildhall providing the "event of the year" for the brewing fraternity.
